

Care in the city

Commissioning and the Care Act

The Care Act gives us a duty to undertake market shaping to promote diverse, sustainable, and high quality services in the city and provide people with meaningful choice regardless of who pays for care.

Market shaping means we will:

- Understand and support the development of the local care services market.
- Assess and meet local care needs.
- Engage with service providers and local communities.
- Integrate our approach with local partners.
- Advise our understanding of future supply and demand through a market position statement, so that service providers can make informed business decisions.
- Secure supply in the market and assure quality when contracting.

Our market shaping and commissioning will be guided by focussing on wellbeing outcomes, sustainability, choice, co-production with partners, and promoting quality services including workforce development, and appropriately resourced care and support services.

The Care Act and Direct Payments

Direct Payments are a way of putting people who are assessed as needing adult care and support in control of choosing which services they need – and who delivers them.

Catherine Young (pictured) has multiple sclerosis (MS). She says moving on to Direct Payments has massively improved her quality of life.

Catherine Young

"Through direct payments I've been able to employ a personal assistant. She is very flexible in terms of the hours she works for me.

"On a bad day it can be basic stuff like helping me get out of bed and in and out of the shower. On a good day it may be taking me to pilates or swimming – and then helping me get out of the pool! – or social things like going to see friends.

"Direct Payments has completely changed my life – I can hardly put into words what a massive difference it has made."

The council's director of adult services, Denise D'Souza, said: "Our top priority is putting people who have social care needs right at the centre of deciding what care they get and how it is delivered.

£20 voucher to help improve our website

Do you know someone who'd like to receive a £20 high street shopping voucher for spending an hour helping us improve our website?

We're looking for a group of volunteers who are not employed by the council, to come into Kings House, week beginning 25 May 2015, to look at our adult social care pages and provide feedback.

So if you know anyone who'd like to take part and get a £20 voucher, please ask them to email tereza.cleverley@brighton-hove.gov.uk by Monday 18 May.
