The University of Brighton’s School of Education is one of the UK’s largest providers of education and training for teachers and other learning and development professionals. We aim to inspire and empower current and future educators in order to enrich the opportunities and experiences of children, young people, adults and their communities; valuing life changes and life-long learning.

Part-time honours degrees

We are pleased to offer a range of part-time honours degrees, aimed at practitioners working in a range of education, learning and development settings.

These degree programmes allow you to study while you work, bringing together practice, theory, current research and policy, supporting you in building your career in your chosen field, as you work towards a professionally recognised qualification.

We offer the following five routes:

Early Childhood Practice BA(Hons)
Aimed at those working in nurseries, as child minders and in other pre-school settings.

Supporting Learning 5-11 Years BA(Hons)
Aimed at teaching assistants and those working in other learning support roles in primary schools.

Supporting Learning 11-19 Years BA(Hons)
Aimed at learning support staff, learning mentors, and others working in similar roles in secondary schools and further education colleges.

Youth Work BA(Hons)
Aimed at youth workers and others in informal education contexts.

Working with Children and Young People BA(Hons)
Aimed at those wanting to develop their practice across a range of education, learning and development contexts.
